Speaker Bio: Dr. Maryam Guiahi completed both her medical school and residency training at Loyola University Medical center. At that time she became interested in the intersection of institutional religious guidelines and medical care. She subsequently completed a Fellowship in Family Planning at Columbia University at which time she also completed a Masters in Epidemiology at the Columbia University Mailman School of Public Health. Since completion of her fellowship she has joined the faculty at University of Colorado Denver where she is an Associate Professor in the Division of Family Planning. Dr. Guiahi’s research interests focus on improving family planning training for residents at faith-based institutions and the ethical implications of religious restrictions to care. She has started the first formal Ryan Residency Training program for a Catholic program with the nearby Saint Joseph Hospital Denver Training program and is currently working with the Ryan program to improve education and training at other faith-based programs.
